BUSINESS SYMPOSIUM

Towards a Low-Carbon Economy: Business Opportunities and Innovative Solutions

As a business or organisation facing the immense challenges posed by climate change you will want to attend this free business symposium, which the Prime Minister, Rt Hon Helen Clark, is expected to open.

Featuring Dr Rajendra Pachauri, Chair of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, and including leading business figures and government advisors, this half-day seminar will examine the challenges the opportunities and some of the solutions being developed in New Zealand and world-wide to answer the questions posed to business by climate change.

Among those leading the discussions over two sessions will be Fonterra Chief Executive Andrew Ferrier, Contact Energy CEO David Baldwin and Secretary to the Treasury, John Whitehead.

These are panelists and speakers at the sharp end of mitigating climate change, managing its affects on their businesses and identifying the opportunities that may arise through new technology or their own management of the issues.

This symposium, hosted by the Institute of Policy Studies and the Climate Change Research Centre, Victoria University of Wellington and funded by the Ministry for the Environment, is one of many events being hosted by New Zealand on behalf of the United Nations' World Environment Day programme.

Places are limited but you can ensure your entry now by registering your interest now through e-mail office@nzbcscd.org.nz or by phoning Andra Findlay at 09 525 9727.
